

The Museum of Interesting Things

A traveling, interactive demonstration and exhibition of antiques and inventions

Daniel Levy ('80) curator and founder of The Museum of Interesting Things a traveling interactive demonstration/exhibition of antiques and inventions that goes to schools and events and inspires kids and adults to be curious and to tinker. Denny Daniel has worked as a filmmaker and photo restorer for such companies as The Statue of Liberty/Ellis Island Foundation, Songs of Love, and the New York Times. His education includes degrees in International Economics and Politics, and Literature/History at New York University. He has lectured at Columbia University and NYU, and worked on two films that won the Sundance Film Festival.

Amassing his collection of antiques for over twenty five years, and having had over 20 museum and gallery exhibitions of his own work at locations ranging from the Chelsea Art Museum in NYC to the Hermitage in Russia, he decided to use his knowledge, experience, contacts and extensive collection to start The Museum of Interesting Things.
